Brooklyn. March 21.—Brooklyn railroad office and tolegraph office and the express office will be known as such no more. Pellonia, Ill., will soon be a thing of the past for after the first of the benown will be known as Brookport, Illinois. It is a long time coming but sho's here. After the first of the month the name of the municipality will be changed by the village board. It was all brought about by the I. C. Railroad company. There has always been a good deal of confusion over the name, as much of the business going to Brooklyn, schuyler, county, or Brooklyn, a suburb of East St. Louis, or East Brooklyn, near Chicago. Express messages, telegrams and all sorts of business gets mixed up frequently and the change will be welcomed by the many representative railroad and tie men who spend much of the winter here. There are, mually, tie men here from all over the north and west. A few of the railroad road receiving ties here are: The I. C. O. B and Q. Wabhab, St. Paul, B. and M. R., the Grand Trank, M. K. and T., the Frisco, A. T. and S. F., U. P. and branches, Chicago and Great Western, Eric, L. E. and W., I. I. and I., Bluff line, T. P. and W. Brooklyn was organized as a town in 1855, but did not make much head-way until the opening of the St. Louis and Paducah railroad in 1889. In that year it was was reorganized with Dr. J. D. Young as mayor, and has grown very rapidly in b. past few grown very rapidly in b) past few years.

The population new is about 1,500. The business interests are very large and are growing at a good pace. There are at present nineteen business houses, a saw mill, a flour mill, three churches, a splendid high school, a school for the colored people, a good newspaper, three hotels, and several very large boarding houses. The Illinois Central railroad uses threefswitch engines in the winter and two during the summer season, over about five miles of track for freight and storage. The railroad yards are very large as every visitor knows. All the packets on the river stop here. The Tennessee and the Clyde coming out of the Tennessee river twice a week unload big eargoes of cotton, lumber, peanuts and other freight.

Several times before there have been attempts to get the name of the town changed but nothing could be done, seemingly, that suited the railroad people better than "Brooklyn." The postoffice officials however would not agree to this unless the good people of Brooklyn, Schuyler county, would consent to a change of the name of their place.

cording to its merits. The destruc-tion of considerable property in Ful-ton by the fire fiend has caused the Kentucky and Tennessee Tariff asso-ciation to take this action for the pro-tection of the companies which have lost heavily in Fulton in recent years. The average raise on all Fulton risks is about 15 per cent. All dwellings with tin or imperfect flues are raised 50 cents on the $100. All business blocks which contain several different blocks which contain several different occupants with varied interests, and all buildings without fire walls are raised about 50 cents on the $100. These rates are not to take effect until Arpil 1, and such risks as are written in March will be taken at the old rate. Nor do the higher rates effect existing policies until the expiration of the term which they cover.

Fulton has a Gun club, recently or-ganized, and composed as follows: Dr. J. M. Alexander, Clint Foster, Dr. I. H. Read, Jube Felts, Dr. J. H. McClure and Dr. Major. As can be easily noted a majority of the mem-bers are doctors, so that the dead and wounded can get medical attention It is a strange coincidence that the Paducah Gun club is also composed largely of doctors.

R. M. Neely has been appointed a night peliceman at Fulton by Marshal Leander Robinson.

In a quarrel which resulted in a fight at Lovelaceville, near Bardwell, Joe Armstronsg, a prominent farmer, fatally out Vol Menser, a horse trader. Menser will die from his wounds. Armstrong escaped.

At the next meeting of the Fulton city council it is probable that the question of a new and modern city hall will be dismissed. Some plans have already been drawn and the council may order the erection of a handsome city hall to cost about $2.500.
